Taking Care of Alaskans

As we begin 2013, we are grateful to have most of our Guardsmen and women at home with their families. Currently, Alaska National Guard has the lowest number of deployed Guard members since the United States entered the global War on Terrorism – this is thanks in part to successful partnerships with coalition forces and the result of years of boots-on-the-ground hard work. Our thoughts are with those who remain deployed overseas, as well as with those who will soon depart. We are proud of their willingness to serve, thankful for their families who remain on the home front, and pray for their safe return.

I have been honored to welcome many of our Guard members home to Alaska from their deployments, most recently greeting the Alaska Air National Guardsmen who deployed last year to Afghanistan as part of the 176th Wing's largest deployment since 2005. Throughout the last several years, hundreds of Alaska National Guardsmen have been called up to support deployments in Iraq, Afghanistan, Kosovo, Djibouti, Egypt and other locations. They served honorably with missions ranging from security forces and aviation support to training Afghan National Army Soldiers and working with Mongolian Armed Forces personnel. Alaska National Guard members have made great contributions to protect all Americans and the freedoms we enjoy.

Caring for our veterans and military families remains a priority. The state's Veterans Affairs Office has been working to ensure the 77,000 Alaska veterans receive the benefits and services they earned. We now have 17 veterans service officers located across the state. In addition, the Veterans Affairs Office has partnered with the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs and sponsored many rural outreach efforts to provide services to veterans close to home. Recently, the Anchorage Veterans Affairs Office relocated to 4600 Debarr Road. By moving the office off of Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson, veterans now have direct access to service providers and Veterans Affairs staff. In just the first few weeks the new location has been open, the staff has seen an exponential increase in the number of people seeking assistance.

Personal and community preparedness for disasters and emergencies is important for all Alaskans. An upcoming preparedness conference will focus on critical decision-making in significant events. The conference will be led by the Division of Homeland Security & Emergency Management and assisted by our partners in disaster mitigation. The distinguished professors from the Harvard schools of government and public health, who lead the National Preparedness Leadership Initiative, will give specific training to emergency managers from across the state. Helping community leaders set the tone for response and recovery for our neighbors is important to protecting the safety of Alaskans.

Thank you to all members of the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs for taking care of Alaskans. Together, we strive to make Alaska a safe and better place to live every day.

Thank You. Governor Sean Parnell thanks Specialist Lawrence Yeaton, of Port Graham, for his service during a welcome home ceremony honoring the return of Alaska Army National Guard members with B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 143rd Infantry Regiment. # The Adjutant General

Major General Thomas H. Katkus
Adjutant General, Alaska National Guard
& Commissioner, Alaska Department of Military & Veterans Affairs

Partnering for Success

The Department of Military & Veterans Affairs is an exemplary organization that succeeds because of the partnerships and relationships its members have developed with local, state and federal agencies here in Alaska and around the world.

Whether it's emergency response or day-to-day activities, partnering with the Coast Guard, active-duty forces, the Alaska State Troopers or local emergency responders, our partnerships bring together like-minded organizations dedicated to Alaska communities.

In the Alaska National Guard, our associations and total force integration with the active duty in rescue coordination, air sovereignty missions, space and missile warning, ground-based missile defense, and flying, supporting and maintaining the C-17 and the C-130 have become models for other organizations to emulate.

These long-term partnerships with our joint military partners here in Alaska are successful because we share resources and align ourselves with the Department of Defense strategic guidance, current constrained budget and reduced force structure. These partnerships allow the Alaska National Guard to achieve much more than we could ever on our own and ensures long term stability and total force effectiveness.

Opening lines of communication and aligning our efforts with the U.S. Coast Guard has been fruitful and good for the state of Alaska as well. Supporting efforts during rescue operations, working together to provide domestic military response with developments in the arctic, and protecting the citizens of Alaska along the coastlines, we share similar goals, values and a vision to provide support around the state.

The department's Division of Homeland Security & Emergency Management also continues to be a successful partnership model of cooperation and coordination during emergency response. Its long-term commitment to reach out and build lasting relationships within all communities and regions of Alaska through preparedness conferences, exercises, and outreach programs is making a difference in the lives of many Alaska citizens because of its clear agenda, defined objectives and communication with every community.

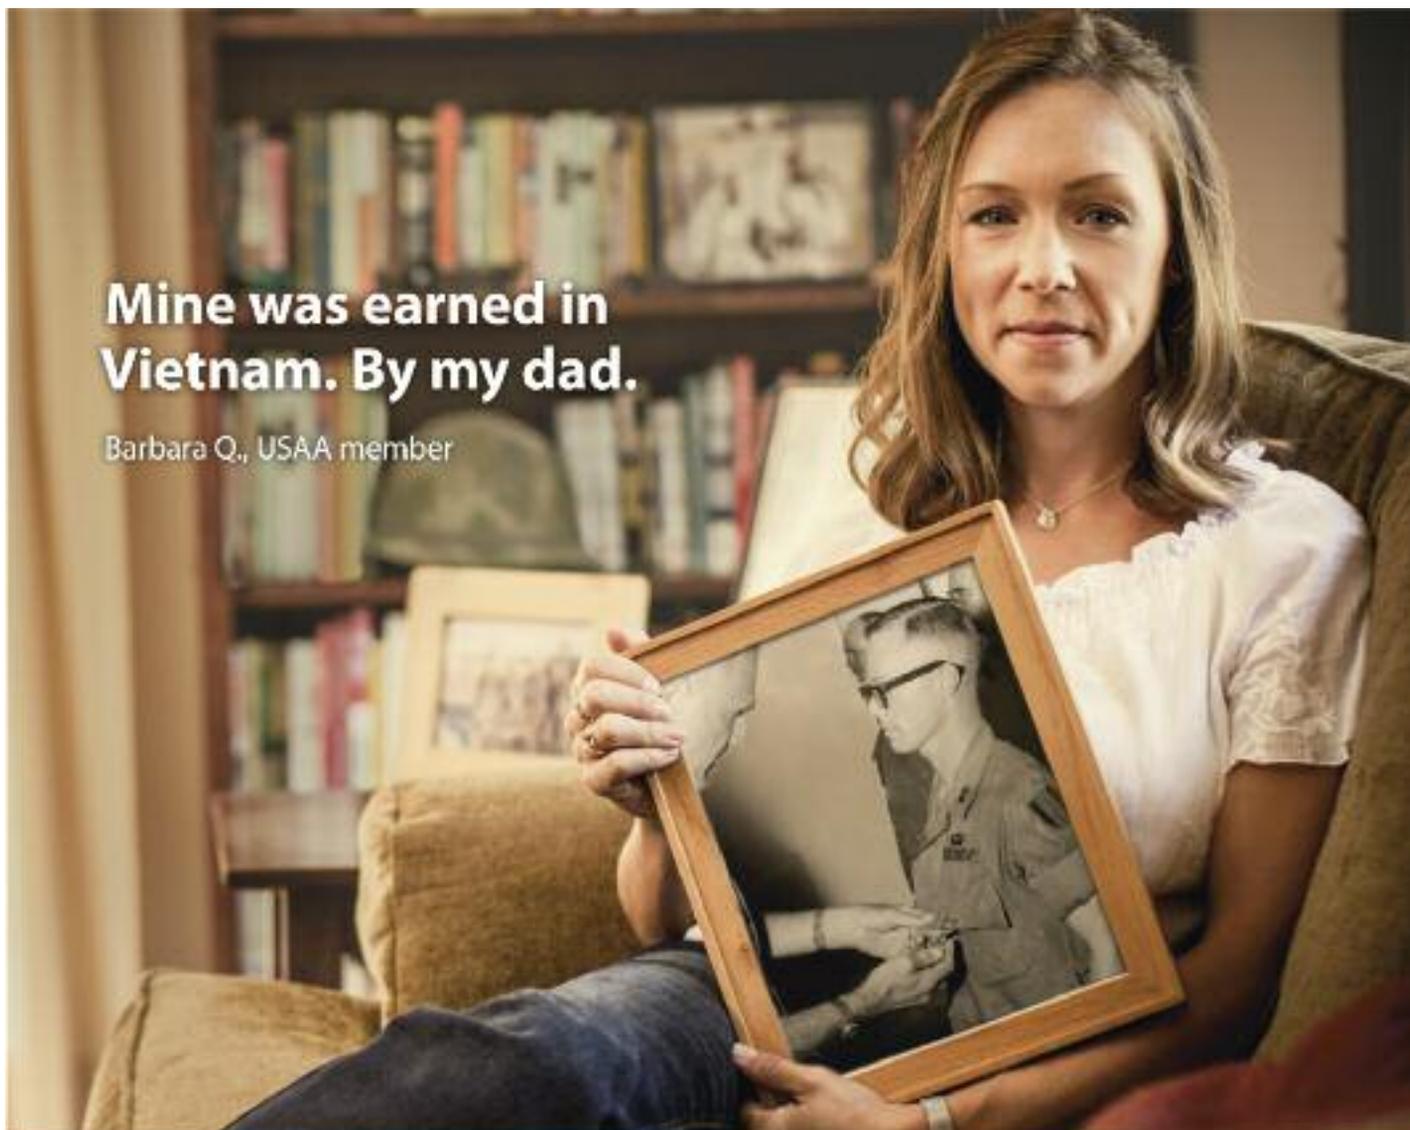

As commissioner of the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs, I place significant value on these partnerships, and as we move forward, we must maintain and develop new relationships to ensure we continue to serve the citizens of Alaska. This mutual respect will allow for our continued growth and will draw on the strengths of every organization dedicated to providing emergency response and defending our freedoms here in Alaska. ■

Airmen Save 305 Lives in Afghanistan

By Major Guy Hayes, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Wars are won by the courageous men and women who fight in the air, on the sea and in the trenches.

Spirited in fight, these brave Soldiers meet the enemy on uneven ground, some giving their lives for fellow service members, while others are seriously injured on the field of battle. In the critical moments that follow, where prompt intervention is needed to get an injured Soldier to a trauma care facility, America's warriors depend on elite combat search and rescue units like the Alaska Air National Guard's 210th, 211th and 212th Rescue Squadrons.

From late May to October, more than 180 citizen-Airmen of the Alaska Air National Guard's 176th Wing were deployed to Afghanistan in support of Operation Enduring Freedom. At the peril of losing their own lives, these men and women dedicated themselves to the mission of helping fellow service members get the critical help they needed, resulting in 305 lives saved.

"The men were very satisfied with the missions we executed over the five-month stretch," said Major Matt Komatsu, 212th Rescue Squadron director of operations. "We saw it all – wounded coalition and Afghan civilians, downed aircraft, extended ground operations while integrated with U.S. Marine Corps recon troops. We even fought alongside United Kingdom troopers in defense of Camp Bastion during the most devastating airfield incursion to occur since the Vietnam War. The experiences were diverse, challenging, and dangerous, and each man was tested and found equal to the task."

Intervening to save lives, Komatsu and fellow Guardian Angels from the Alaska Air National Guard rescue squadrons often found themselves in difficult situations engaging enemies while attempting to bring back the sons and daughters of coalition forces.

"In late July, we were alerted with a casevac [casualty evacuation] of two Danish soldiers whose vehicle hit an IED and were in the middle of a fire fight," Komatsu said. "Guardian Angel teams responded on HH-60s [Pave Hawk helicopters] into an active landing zone with small arms fire and grenade launches coming from multiple directions. When the helo landed, Technical Sergeant Chris Harding, Staff Sergeant Nick Watson and Staff Sergeant Bill Cenna made a run under fire through an uncleared IED field, a flowing canal, and then climbed a 12-foot embankment to reach the wounded Danish soldiers. After rendering care to the wounded, they realized they had four, not two patients to move, so the team quickly stabilized the patients and made their way back to the helicopter through a barrage of small arms fire before turning around and going back to bring the other two back safely to the helo waiting to take them to the hospital. Their actions resulted in four lives saved."

Extreme stories of heroism and courageous actions, as shared by Komatsu, have become the norm for Guardian Angels from the Alaska Air National Guard at home and abroad. Their missions are detailed in the countless recommendations for decorations from this deployment, but it's the team and the unity of effort at every level of the operation they will tout as the reason they are so successful in saving lives in these austere conditions.

"Guys were getting off the ground in six minutes, even though we were on a 15-minute response time per the directive," said Lieutenant Colonel Steve Latham, 210th Rescue Squadron director of operations. "I think our quickest mission from takeoff to landing was 13 minutes, and the Soldier was seven miles away. These guys were always ready to go when the call came in and performed extremely well under pressure, frequently taking fire during rescues."

Preparing for Combat Rescues. Alaska Air National Guard pararescuemen assist a simulated Marine survivor during Exercise Mojave Viper in March 2012. The exercise prepared both forces for real-world combat in Afghanistan and assisted them in saving 305 lives from late May to October.

Flying more than 850 missions and nearly 600 hours in a five-month period also requires a significant support team ready to assist any way it can, and according to Komatsu and Latham, the 176th maintenance personnel deserve a lot of credit for their role in Afghanistan.

"Maintenance deserves a lot of praise for what they did," said Komatsu. "They got birds up in the air, kept them up in the air and repaired them after they got shot up; it was a huge team effort."

"Our maintenance troops were stellar," Latham said. "We fly them hard over there, and it's hard to maintain them because stuff breaks more often, but they were extremely focused and absolutely understood the importance of what was going on. When we got a radio call, these guys were sprinting out toward the helicopter to help get us airborne, throwing vests on the guys, helping them strap in, and that's not something you normally see in the helicopter world, but because we've known most of these guys for 10 to 15 years, in some cases, there's a motivation to do the best you can for your bros. There's a special relationship with a Guard or Reserve unit."

Back at home in Alaska, the unit now continues to focus on training and the mission of saving lives here in Alaska, a mission Komatsu says helped them greatly in Afghanistan.

"It is a concrete truth that the 11th Air Force Search and Rescue mission and the 100-plus search and rescues we execute a year prepare us for an effortless transition to combat personnel recovery," Komatsu said. "We have seamless integration with our HH-60s and HC-130s up here in Alaska, which became absolutely crucial in Afghanistan. Guardian Angels in Alaska don't have to be sharp [just for] the four months they deploy, they have to stay sharp 365 days a year. You can't buy that kind of mission focus through training; it can only come with repeated operations, which we have up here. The transition is seamless, the mission essentially the same; we simply transition from weather and environmental threats to combat threats."

The deployment to Afghanistan was the single largest deployment of personnel from the 176th Wing since 2003. ■

Soldiers Deploy as Liaisons to Mongolians

By Sergeant Balinda O'Neal,
DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ...

Two Alaska Army National Guardsmen deployed in December as U.S. liaisons in support of the Mongolian Expeditionary Task Forces in Afghanistan.

Lieutenant Colonel Simon Brown, Joint Force Headquarters, and Sergeant First Class Todd Patnode, 1-297th Reconnaissance and Surveillance Squadron, departed Alaska in November for Fort Benning, Ga., where they received two weeks of pre-mobilization training before deploying to Camp Eggers, Kabul, for approximately nine months.

The seventh team from the Alaska Army National Guard to support the METF, Brown and Patnode will be liaisons and tactical advisors based on the needs of the Mongolian Armed Forces.

"In the past, the METF have provided mobile training teams to support artillery, heavy weapons and helicopter maintenance to the Afghan Army," said Major Mark Binggeli, a former liaison officer to the METF. "This rotation has a force protection requirement for guard tower security at Camp Eggers and airfield security elements at Kabul International Airport."

As the Mongolians' direct link to the U.S. Forces-Afghanistan and the Base Support Group at Camp Eggers and other sites in country, the Alaska Guardsmen act specifically as U.S. representative liaisons and advisors to ensure proper communication and understanding between the Mongolians and other U.S. or NATO elements during their deployment. ■

"I'll be managing Mr. Bonnet's enlisted force along with planning and developing components for the Ardent Sentry exercise, which is really all about exercising what we currently do in our states to protect the homeland, specifically focusing on a chemical, biological, radiological or nuclear event," Choate said.

Ardent Sentry is a major exercise that U.S. Northern Command plans each year, and Alaska will host the exercise in 2014.

Five Alaska Army National Guardsmen returned to Alaska in December following a six-month deployment to Sinai, Egypt, in support of diplomatic efforts there and throughout the Middle East.

Chief Warrant Officer Brian Baranek, Chief Warrant Officer Ross Wise, Warrant Officer James Smith, Staff Sergeant Billy Austin and Sergeant Michael Ortwig with F Company, 207th Theater Activation Company, deployed in June to fly the C-23 Sherpa in support of the Multinational Force Observers and Civilian Observers Unit missions in Sinai.

“Our unit was part of a multi-national force with military service members from all over the world to include Canada, Norway, Australia and New Zealand,” Baranek said. “It was a great opportunity to work with different nationalities while conducting an important mission.”

The main objective of U.S. Northern Command is to partner in conducting homeland defense, civil support and security cooperation to defend and secure the United States and its interests. Civil support missions include domestic disaster relief, counterdrug operations and management of the consequences of a terrorist event employing a weapon of mass destruction.

“When I called to inquire about a senior enlisted position at U.S. Northcom, they thought I would be a good fit because of my working relationship with other states in dealing with North America defense and my involvement with defense support to civil authorities,” Choate said.

His tour at U.S. Northern Command could be as long as three years. He’s looking forward to working in a “broader, diverse, joint environment,” he said.

“Command Sergeant Major Choate has a long, dedicated career in the Alaska National Guard with a commitment to grow and strengthen the enlisted corps,” said Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general of the Alaska National Guard.

“While we will miss seeing him every day, he will remain an Alaska National Guardsman during his time at U.S. Northcom; we know he will represent us well and make great contributions to the protection of Americans here at home.” ■

“The C-23 allowed us to conduct aerial observation at low altitudes while flying slow with good maneuverability,” Baranek said. “We were able to haul up to 23 people and their gear between different locations, which was critical because with the current situations in the region and road closures, we were often the only mode of transportation from Sinai.”

The unit returned home to Alaska in mid-December.

“It was awesome arriving back in Alaska for Christmas,” Baranek said. “Our families were very happy, and it was great to be home.” ■

JOINT BASE ELMENDORF-RICHARDSON, Alaska ...

New Addition. Airman First Class Zacharie Abair holds his baby daughter for the first time after returning from Afghanistan in October. This deployment was the 176th Wing's single largest deployment of personnel since 2003. Photo: Major Guy Hayes, DMVA Public Affairs

The returning Airmen were primarily maintenance crews from the wing's 176th Maintenance Group and rescue personnel from the wing's three rescue units: HH-60 Pave Hawk helicopter pilots and crew from the 210th Rescue Squadron, HC-130 King pilots and crew from the 211th, and pararescuemen and combat rescue officers from the 212th. Together with a handful of expeditionary combat support personnel from other 176th Wing units, the Guardsmen formed a highly capable and versatile rescue package.

In Afghanistan, the rescue personnel conducted combat search and rescue. This involved challenging casualty-evacuation missions, flying into "hot" combat zones, frequently under fire, to pull wounded coalition service members to safety and transport them to a treatment facility within one hour. The maintenance crews supported this vital work by keeping the rescuers' planes and helicopters ready for flight at a moment's notice.

"Our Alaska Air National Guard members accepted the challenge, and because of their expertise and professionalism, they saved lives performing critical combat search and rescue missions in support of coalition forces," said Colonel Donald S. "Scott" Wenke, 176th Wing commander. "We are proud to welcome these accomplished Airmen home and are grateful for their service to our state and nation."

Since 1952, the 176th Wing has effectively served Alaskans at home and American interests abroad and has supported large-scale deployments each year since 2003. ■

SOLDIERS RETURN FROM SECURITY FORCES MISSION IN AFGHANISTAN

By Staff Sergeant Karima Turner, 134th Public Affairs Detachment

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. ... More than 100 Alaska Army National Guardsmen returned to the United States in early November, following a yearlong deployment to Afghanistan in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

Soldiers of B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 143rd Infantry Regiment, arrived in Indianapolis and were greeted at the plane by U.S. Senator Mark Begich, Alaska Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell, Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general of the Alaska National Guard, and several other Alaska National Guard senior leaders.

In Afghanistan, the Alaska Guardsmen provided security forces for provincial reconstruction teams operating in dangerous areas across the country to rebuild infrastructure, assist with agriculture, build wells and provide health care.

“I’m very proud of our Alaska National Guardsmen, and I’m honored to welcome them home to the United States,” Treadwell said. “These brave Soldiers courageously performed security forces missions in extremely dangerous areas throughout Afghanistan to assist the provincial reconstruction teams that are rebuilding the country. They are true American heroes, and I, along with all Alaskans, thank them for their exemplary service.”

Homeland Security & Emergency Management

The Cost of Disaster Response. Heavy equipment and operators line the streets of Cordova during the 2012 Prince William Sound storm. The excessive snowfall from the storm prompted the city of Cordova to request assistance from the state. ## THE UNSUNG HEROES OF DISASTER ASSISTANCE

By Jeremy Zidek, DHS&EM Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... The title of emergency manager invokes visions of first responders plucking people from a perilous situation, officials establishing temporary shelters, and emergency crews working hard to protect homes and other critical infrastructure. While these impressions are correct, it does not tell the entire emergency management story.

It is also incumbent upon emergency management to help disaster-impacted areas rebound from the effects of a disaster. In the wake of many events, the broken homes, damaged roads, compromised buildings and disrupted utilities can prevent residents from returning. In some cases, this means that a once-vibrant community is diminished.

The Division of Homeland Security & Emergency Management's Disaster Assistance section is designed to help disaster-impacted residents and communities restore themselves to a pre-disaster condition.

"Disaster Assistance does not wait for the disaster event to conclude before we get involved," said David Andrews, DHS&EM chief of Disaster Assistance. "We have staff augmenting the State Emergency Operation Center during the response phase of a disaster. This early involvement allows staff to gain situational awareness, identify key personnel within disaster-impacted communities and assess the size of the incident."

Governor Activates Disaster Assistance. Alaska Governor Sean Parnell tours storm-damaged areas in the Matanuska-Susitna Borough in September. He later issued a disaster declaration, which activated the state's public and individual Disaster Assistance programs. Photo: Courtesy of the Office of Governor Sean Parnell

As part of the state's incident management team, Disaster Assistance staff may be called upon to work 12-hour shifts in the State Emergency Operations Center during the days and weeks of the response phase. After the event has passed and immediate life-safety emergency needs have been addressed, the SEOC is deactivated. Disaster Assistance is then able to make a rapid transition to the recovery effort that takes place throughout the ensuing months and years.

Disasters can hit hard on a community's infrastructure as well as individual and family homes within the community. Disaster Assistance has public assistance programs to fund repairs to critical infrastructure and emergency response costs, and individual assistance programs to help families repair their primary residence or replace other essential items. For families that cannot return to their homes, individual assistance is able to provide temporary housing assistance. In order for these programs to be activated, the governor must issue a disaster declaration that specifies activation of the programs.

In order to help disaster-impacted Alaskans, Disaster Assistance moves swiftly but smartly. Individuals and local governments want to begin rebuilding as fast as possible. During the September 2012 severe storms, emergency shelters were established in many communities. After the storms had passed, 37 individuals and families found that their homes were either destroyed or unlivable. Disaster Assistance worked with each emergency housing applicant to ensure that they had adequate shelter until repairs could be made, or permanent housing could be found.

"The window to offer help to a disaster victim is measured in a matter of hours, while at the same time homes can take weeks and months to repair," Andrews said. "Our dedicated Disaster Assistance staff often puts in very long hours to ensure that those who need help receive it."

Disaster Assistance makes every effort to meet with those impacted and provide information on what programs are available, what documentation is required and what costs are eligible.

During the September 2012 severe storms, DHS&EM staff participated in seven community meetings and established eight disaster assistance centers within the hardest hit communities. Establishing DACs within communities allows Disaster Assistance staff to establish a face-to-face relationship with those they are trying to help. It also gives applicants the opportunity to fully explore what assistance is available and what will be eligible under the state's disaster recovery programs. With this information, disaster assistance applicants can move forward with their own recovery efforts.

"Alaska is one of the few states in the nation able to provide this level of disaster assistance to our citizens," said John Madden, DHS&EM director. "As a state, we have decided that Alaskans impacted by a disaster will not have to stand alone, that when a disaster cuts a swath of destruction in a community, the state has programs, and more importantly, the will to act and help residents recover."

Damages to critical infrastructure in a community can hamper individuals' and families' ability to rebound from a disaster. Through the state's public assistance program, DHS&EM is able to help communities repair damaged infrastructure and recover emergency response costs. Rebuilding roads, bridges, schools, railroads, hospitals, utilities and other critical structures may be eligible for recovery funding. In addition, funds expended by a community to respond to a disaster event and/or performed emergency protective measures can be claimed as an eligible cost.

Throughout the recovery process, Disaster Assistance is in constant contact with individuals and communities. Some of the work can be accomplished through email, fax and phones. However, Disaster Assistance specialists do find themselves in rural and urban communities for long periods of time.

During the 2011 Crooked Creek ice jam flooding, recovery specialists were embedded in the community throughout the summer. Living and working from a temporary building, Disaster Assistance staff were able to guide the community through the housing recovery mission. Thanks in large part to Disaster Assistance staff efforts, nine Crooked Creek families were able to move into new housing just 104 days after severe ice jam flooding had destroyed their old homes.

"To work in Disaster Assistance, a person needs to be willing to work long hours for long periods of time, be willing to go the extra mile to help people and communities and have knowledge of specialized disaster recovery programs," Andrews said. "We can teach people the specialized skill set that is needed, but we cannot teach compassion or commitment. Disaster Assistance staff are in the communities and meet the disaster survivors. They see the damages, hear their voices and see their faces. It takes more than a bureaucratic approach to the programs to be successful. It is incumbent upon us to find solutions for people during the time that they need it most." ■

OPERATION SANTA CLAUS

Spreads Holiday Cheer

By Kalei Rupp, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... The holidays were celebrated with lively music, good cheer and fun festivities during the 56th annual Operation Santa Claus 2012 season in rural Alaska.

Operation Santa Claus is part of the Alaska National Guard's yearly community relations and support program that provides toys, clothing, books, school supplies, fresh fruit and sundaes to youngsters in communities across the state. In 2012, the program traveled to four communities: Northway, Venetie, Atmautluak and Mekoryuk.

"I've been to amazing places because of the Operation Santa Claus program and my role with the Salvation Army, places that I never would have dreamed I would have been able to go," said Jenni Ragland, Operation Santa Claus volunteer from the Salvation Army. "To see the smiles on kids' faces and to share the joy of Christmas and know, that at least for a day, we're doing something that's different than their normal and just helping share joy with them."

Santa, Mrs. Claus and a team of elves had a variety of sleighs bringing them around Alaska – an Alaska Air National Guard C-130 and C-17, an Alaska Army National Guard UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter and an Alaska Army National Guard C-23 Sherpa.

How It All Began

The Alaska Air National Guard originally started Operation Santa Claus in 1956 as a result of a request from St. Mary's Mission for toys for their children. Spring floods had denied a fishing season that year, and the drought that followed eliminated the big game. Every bit of money the mission had was used to pay for food to be shipped in, so it appeared there was no money to buy gifts for the children for Christmas that year.

So, Guardsmen would accept new or used toys, in those days, from members of the Anchorage community. In turn, they'd rehab used toys, then hand them over to Santa Claus for delivery aboard an Air Guard C-123J Provider.

Throughout the years, as time and social conditions in rural Alaska changed, other villages, schools and groups have invited Operation Santa Claus to their communities. Tens of thousands of Alaska's children and adults have been on the receiving end of St. Nick's good cheer. ■

Honoring Veterans and Their Service

By Verdie Bowen, Veterans Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... This year the Veterans Day National Committee selected the Alaska Department of Military & Veterans Affairs program at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson as one of 58 regional sites across the nation for honoring veterans on Nov. 11. It is apparent that we provide a great honor to our veterans, and the national committee recognized that.

The journey to making a veteran starts out with the Oath of Enlistment.

“I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to regulations and the Uniform Code of Military Justice. So help me God.”

These 76 words are a rite of passage.

What makes our nation so great is that this binds our service members not to a king or state, but to the Constitution, a document encompassing the vision of liberty and the rule of free men under law. Some might see this as a radical concept, but it is one that has kept America free and strong and a beacon of hope for people around the world for 236 years.

It is also this promise that sets in motion the journey to serve our country with honor and, once fulfilled, results in the privileged title: veteran. Their bravery, their resourcefulness and their patriotism marks them as America’s finest citizens: Americans who stepped out of the crowd and voluntarily took the Oath. They served under those words; some bled and others died for them. The decision to serve changed their lives forever.

Remember that a veteran is a fellow citizen, an ordinary person who at one significant point in his or her life made out a blank check payable to the United States of America for any amount up to and including his or her life. Our veterans do not serve for glory or power or wealth but for freedom. The simple recognition of service well performed – a sincere thank you – means more to most veterans than any other reward. ■

Returning Alaska National Guardsmen Reflect on Veterans Day

By Staff Sergeant Karima Turner,
134th Public Affairs Detachment

CAMP ATTERBURY, Ind. ...

For recent Alaska Army National Guard Soldiers returning from Afghanistan, Veterans Day 2012 took on new meaning.

Soldiers of B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 143rd Infantry Regiment, returned to the United States three days before Veterans Day, following a yearlong deployment to Afghanistan where they conducted security forces missions throughout dangerous areas of the country to ensure the safety of provincial reconstruction teams who are helping to rebuild the war-torn country.

Specialist Zachary Sparks, of Eagle River, who deployed to Afghanistan with his brother, said that deploying and seeing first hand the challenges that Soldiers have faced in the past, made returning to the United States in time for Veterans Day even more special.

“Coming home from this deployment and being a combat veteran of the U.S. military gives me a whole new outlook on what Veterans Day means,” Sparks said. “Now I understand what Soldiers, who came before me, went through and the real meaning of the holiday, which is to honor all Soldiers who have made sacrifices for the freedoms we have today.”

Returning Soldier Specialist Coleman Wenke, of North Pole, comes from a long line of military men and women and said that while Veterans Day has always been a part of his life, it holds more meaning now because he has walked in the shoes of his ancestors.

“My great grandparents, my grandparents and parents were or are still in the military,” Wenke said. “Veterans Day was always a big part of my family, but I think it's more significant now because I now have a better understanding of the sacrifices that they had to make for our freedoms. The significance of sacrifice on Veterans Day is huge; it means people have died for our freedoms, and that's something we should never forget.”

Corporal Daniel Thornton, of Wasilla, who has served in multiple wars and gone on many deployments, feels that regardless of whether a Soldier has been deployed multiple times or not, the fact that they knowingly volunteer to serve and protect the United States and its freedoms is something to honor.

“I think Veterans Day is significant to all of us, especially those of us that have served in the past,” Thornton said. “Every Soldier who wears the uniform understands that deploying is something that we may have to do. We are willing to give up our lives to fight for the American way of life and know that it's a possibility every time we extend or enlist, but we are willing to take that chance because we love our country.” ■

Search-and-Rescue Training in Sitka Mixes Civilian and Military Agencies

By Staff Sergeant Karima Turner,
134th Public Affairs Detachment

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Nearly 40 Alaska Army National Guard Soldiers traveled from Anchorage to Sitka in October to participate in an interagency search-and-rescue training event.

Designed to facilitate interoperability between civilian and military assets, the training focused on educating participants on various assets, tactics, techniques and procedures utilized during SAR missions.

“We went down there to answer the question, ‘If civilian assets needed Guard assistance during a back country search, what would they want us to know?’” said Captain Rusty Meyer, company commander, C Company (Long Range Surveillance), 1-297th Reconnaissance & Surveillance. “We worked with U.S. Coast Guard, Sitka Mountain Rescue, Juneau Mountain Rescue, Alaska Mountain Rescue out of Anchorage and the Sitka Fire Department to see how we could best work together during a search-and-rescue mission.”

Meyer said that a key participant of the SAR training, Wrangell Emergency Medical Services, was unable to attend because of weather conditions but still assisted the training by providing lessons they had learned to the Soldiers and other SAR teams.

“Even with the weather challenges, the Wrangell EMS team made sure we were able to learn from their recent real-world rescues,” Meyer said. “In SAR training, it’s crucial that you study previous missions, so you can learn from those events and improve your knowledge base.”

The U.S. Coast Guard out of Sitka provided a capabilities and emergency egress brief on the MH-60 Jay Hawk helicopter, the Coast Guard’s version of the Alaska Army National Guard’s UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter.

Key leaders from each of the entities discussed incident management, how the different organizations run an SAR operation and how Alaska National Guard assets could fit into that kind of operation if additional assistance is needed.

“One of the things that we learned is National Guard and civilian SAR personnel operate on similar guidance and organizational structure,” Meyer said. “Once we sat down and were able to understand the different language that we use for the same thing, everything else fell into place, and we were able to communicate effectively during training.”

Following hours of intense classroom work, the Soldiers and civilians ventured outdoors for practical exercises.

Met with pouring rain and dropping temperatures, participants practiced basic avalanche recovery operations and proper beacon usage, as well as different search patterns used for different types of SAR missions.

“The SAR training in Sitka was very informative,” said Private Johnathan Spaar, C Company (Long Range Surveillance), 1-297th Reconnaissance & Surveillance.

“We were introduced to some very effective techniques, so if we get called up to participate in SAR missions in the future, we will have the tools and knowledge to get the job done.”

The ability to communicate during an emergency is also critical. Alaska Army National Guard Soldiers used the practical exercise to train on their high frequency radio communications, essential to any successful SAR mission.

“The communications team worked in conjunction with the Sitka Fire Department to set up various communications networks that would allow for emergency communications for city, state and federal entities,” Meyer said. “Using satellite communications, FM and high frequency radio, they were able to conduct communications checks with U.S. Coast Guard MH-60 Jay Hawk helicopter crews. Our Soldiers were also able to set up the high frequency and conduct a 600-mile high frequency shot from Sitka to the Anchorage armory to validate use of high frequency systems in case of an emergency situation.”

From incident commanders to medical emergency responders and communications specialists, each Soldier came away from the training with a better understanding of what in-state capabilities are available for SAR.

“Training in Sitka was very inspiring,” Spaar said. “Most of us have been waiting a long time for the slightest opportunity to ‘give back’ and help our community, and now we know how.” ■

WATER PURIFICATION FOR DISASTERS

By Brigadier General Roger Holl,
Alaska State Defense Force

ALCANTRA ARMORY, Wasilla, Alaska ... Polluted water is often an issue after a flood or other natural disaster. Potable drinking water is an urgent priority for communities when their water resource is contaminated. In order to aid in this problem, the Alaska State Defense Force has trained to provide environmentally safe, fresh water for communities.

The 3rd Battalion in Fairbanks and the 5th Battalion in Delta Junction led the way for the ASDF by training for the past few years on commercially available water purification machines. These machines are lightweight, highly portable and can deliver 3,000 gallons of safe drinking water every 24 hours. With these lightweight machines, the ASDF has the capability to go into a small community after a disaster and immediately begin providing fresh water.

Company trained ASDF personnel at the Alcantra Armory in Wasilla. This allowed the 2nd and 4th Battalions of the Alaska State Defense Force to train with the Guard on Alaska National Guard water treatment equipment. The result has been another opportunity for the ASDF to cooperate with the Alaska National Guard and to be able to offer support and augmentation for water treatment responses.

The Alaska State Defense Force continues to build capabilities and missions designed to assist in emergency response and recovery. ■

Distinguished Flying Crosses with Valor Awarded

By Major Guy Hayes, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Three Alaska Air National Guardsmen with the 212th Rescue Squadron were awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross with Valor in November during a ceremony on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson.

Senior Master Sergeant Christopher “Doug” Widener, Master Sergeant Brandon Stuemke and Staff Sergeant Aaron Parcha received the medals for having distinguished themselves in combat by “heroism or extraordinary achievement while participating in an aerial flight.”

“During the span of five days, these warriors, these para-rescuemen, flew 25 missions retrieving a total of 49 U.S. and coalition personnel, with 11 of those personnel deceased,” said Major Joe Conroy, 212th Rescue Squadron commander, Alaska Air National Guard. “Nineteen of the personnel they retrieved were rescued by conducting a hoist insertion and extraction, often under heavy fire from the enemy.”

Conducting actions in the face of extreme danger, these para-rescuemen supported missions during Operation Bulldog Bite in Kunar Province, Afghanistan, in November 2010, an operation that involved some of the largest rescues and evacuations since Operation Anaconda in 2002.

“These brave and courageous warriors exited an HH-60 helicopter while in flight, by a cable hoist system under extreme and intense circumstances to recover fellow combatants wounded during ground combat operations with the enemy,” Conroy said. “Their direct actions led to lives saved, and those Soldiers have now returned to duty and back to their loved ones.”

While the ceremony recognized the actions of these three heroic para-rescuemen, Conroy also asked people in attendance to honor the Soldiers who perished during Operation Bulldog Bite. Sentiments echoed by Distinguished Flying Cross recipient Stuemke.

“It’s so much more than just a medal,” Stuemke said. “Yes, it’s the Distinguished Flying Cross with Valor, but it goes way beyond that. It goes to what it represents. It goes to the men out there in the Watapur Valley who sacrificed their lives. It goes to the men out there in the Watapur Valley who we pulled off the hill during that week. It’s so much more than just a medal. Numerous individuals that week paid the ultimate sacrifice. Those are the guys. Those are wounds that I will carry with me internally for the rest of my life. Those are faces that I will never forget.” ■

JOINT BASE ELMENDORF-RICHARDSON, Alaska ... Three Alaska Air National Guardsmen with the 176th Wing's 212th Rescue Squadron were each awarded a Bronze Star medal with Valor device at a decoration ceremony in October on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson.

Surrounded by the support and appreciation of friends and family, the men received their medals for an act of heroism or meritorious achievement in a combat zone during a 2010 or 2011 deployment.

A Bronze Star Medal is the fourth-highest combat award presented in the United States since the start of World War II. They are awarded only to those who perform acts of valor within areas of hazardous duty, as laid out in U.S. law.

Captain Koaalii C. Bailey, Technical Sergeant Shane J. Hargis and Staff Sergeant Theodore M. Sierocinski had their stories of valor read aloud to the crowd, and in turn were pinned with the medal.

"When you hear the citations read today for these warriors, there are many details between the lines that these gentlemen conducted in the face of extreme adversity," said Major Joseph Conroy, commander of the 212th Rescue Squadron, during the ceremony.

These Airmen illustrated the bravery that the people of their squadron and the Alaska

Air National Guard stand for every day.

"I'm amazed on a day-to-day basis at what my personnel accomplish – whether it's during deployments or here in Alaska conducting rescue missions,"

Conroy said. ■

Hero2Hired: Helping Veterans Find Jobs

By ESGR Staff

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... The Alaska Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve welcomed a new staff member in September who serves as the employment transition coordinator for the state.

James Hastings is the third full-time staff member for the Alaska Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve and works as a contractor for Hero2Hired. His primary duty is to assist warriors of the National Guard and Reserve, as well as veterans statewide, with employment resources from where to look for employment postings to résumé assistance to filling vacancies within a business when possible.

After only a few weeks as the Hero2Hired program manager, Hastings has built a partnership with the general manager of Siemens, Inc., Leverette Hoover, and has received the employer's perspective on what qualities the company looks for in a prospective employee. Hoover also offered to provide briefing materials and the employer's perspective called "Boots to Briefcase."

"The great state of Alaska is an amazing place for service members to live, work and raise military families," Hastings said. "Education and employment opportunities are equaled only by the vast beauty of this land."

"When it comes to supporting the men and women in uniform, our state leadership is committed to providing access and opportunity for our warriors and their loved ones to succeed in the pursuit of their life goals and continue sustaining and growing the bright future of the Last Frontier."

Hastings has developed and maintains a wealth of connections throughout the veteran community since he retired from the Army in 2006. Since then, he cofounded locally Alaska's Healing Hearts and has been working with and supporting the Wounded Warrior

Project and Alaska State Elks Association Wounded Veterans Project. He has served as the chairman of the Matanuska-Susitna Valley Veterans Council for six years and presently serves on the governor's Alaska Veterans Advisory Council.

"I am genuinely humbled to be afforded the chance to assist our National Guard, Reserve, and veterans with employment, and further, that we can build relationships with our local business leaders to encourage and assist them in hiring our greatest Alaskan resource: warriors," Hastings said. ■

Family Program

Help for Your Home, Family and Health

By Family Program Staff

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Whether it is financial, emotional, household or health benefits support you need, your Alaska National Guard Family Program strives to empower you with the tools to maintain or become self-sufficient.

From balancing your bank accounts to shoveling snow during record snowfalls, you may be stepping into a few new territories. As your responsibilities change, your emotions may change as well. All of these changes are normal and expected; other families of service members are experiencing the same or similar adjustments. Support is only a phone call away.

Financial Support

Becoming a part of your service member's military life or experiencing a deployment may bring financial gain, as well as potential financial stress. The Department of Defense and National Guard Bureau offer many programs to assist families and service members in their efforts to create a safe and secure financial environment.

One of your biggest assets is Glenn Bobo, our very own personal financial consultant located in the Alaska National Guard armory on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson in room D-101. Schedule an appointment today for a personal one-on-one consultation covering everything from basic budgeting to asset allocation for retirement. He's also available for group consultations or quick five-minute presentations at commanders' calls. You can reach him at (907) 428-7524. You can also visit <https://www.jointservicesupport.org> for additional financial services.

Emotional Support

When you or your loved one is a service member, moments of emotional change seem inevitable. It is our goal, as your Family Program, to support and help you and your family through those moments. Several resources immediately available to you include our psychological health program with Lyn Tashea, military family life consultants Rocio Baquerizo and Shirley Durtschi, as well as a psychological health program at each wing. The Air and Army Guard chaplains are also a ready resource and work in conjunction with our programs. These are all confidential resources available to you and your family at no cost. For additional resources visit <http://www.jointservicesupport.org/FP/Emotional.aspx> or call your Family Assistance Center at (907) 428-6663.

Health Benefits

Family members of National Guard and Reserve members are eligible for different Tricare benefits depending on their status. Find out when your family's eligibility kicks in at <http://www.jointservicesupport.org/FP/HealthBenefits.aspx>. We also have a transition assistance advisor, Mirra Adams. She is available to assist you in navigating through the numerous benefits and entitlements in the Department of Defense and U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs system. She can also help you obtain entitlements through the military health system and access community resources.

To access these benefits and more, contact your Family Assistance Center. Help is available to you during normal duty hours at 1 (888) 917-3608 or (907) 428-6663 and after hours for emergencies that can't wait until normal duty hours. We have six locations throughout Alaska – Bethel, Juneau, Fairbanks, Fort Greely, Matanuska-Susitna Valley and Anchorage. The Family Assistance Center's mission is resource and referral to military and/or civilian programs in your local community, and its number one priority is you!

You can like us on Facebook at <http://www.facebook.com/AKNGFamily> and be the first to see events and opportunities available to you through your Family Program. ■

Helping Returning Guard Members. Mirta Adams, transition assistance coordinator for the Alaska National Guard, goes over programs and resources available to recently returned Soldiers from B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 143rd Infantry Regiment. The Soldiers returned from Afghanistan in November and were going through the demobilization process at Camp Atterbury, Ind. Next to Adams, James Hastings, employment transition coordinator with Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve, helps with employment resources and the Hero2Hired program.

Reintegration Programs Help Returning Guardsmen

CAMP ATTERBURY, Ind. ...

Returning from an overseas deployment is an exciting time for most service members, but it's also a time that ushers in significant change and uncertainty for some. To help Guardsmen reintegrate into civilian life in the United States, the Alaska National Guard Family Program office is helping to educate Guard members on the resources available now that they are back from deployment.

While the majority of service members return from combat missions without any visible injuries or ailments, often the psychological impact from post-traumatic stress disorder and problems associated with traumatic brain injuries may not surface until after the official demobilization process.

Mirta Adams, transition assistance coordinator for the Alaska National Guard, said that one of the most important things service members need to remember in order to get help is to be honest about issues they are having. Sleeplessness, nightmares, aggression and excessive drinking are just a few symptoms of PTSD and TBI, and there are things that spouses, parents, family and friends can do to help.

"One of the things we find is that Soldiers will hide their problems for several different reasons," Adams said. "Some of the reasons they do this are fear of having a stigma attached to them, being discharged from service or not being able to re-enlist, so many of them hide their ailments, which makes it very hard on their families and puts unnecessary strains on them."

To combat these issues, the Alaska National Guard has put in place different programs and resources for Guard members and their families.

The first one is the Yellow Ribbon Reintegration Program, which consolidates recently deployed units at 30-, 60- and 90-day intervals. The reason for this is that typically, these are the time periods in which many problems begin to surface, although for some it may take years for problems to arise.

"National Guard and Reserve Soldiers are obligated to the Yellow Ribbon Program at 30, 60 and 90 days after returning from deployment," Adams said. "During the consolidations, they are allowed to bring up to two family members with them, and they learn different ways to deal with some of the issues like post-traumatic stress disorder or traumatic brain injury that may have come up following deployment."

A stressor unique to Guard and Reservists is job placement following a deployment, while active-duty Soldiers and active Guard Reserve Soldiers come back to waiting jobs, often traditional Guard and Reserve members lose their income once they return home. In order to address that, a program called Hero2Hired has been implemented to assist service members in finding work.

Because of the remoteness of many of the villages in Alaska, Adams said another unique concern is isolation.

"What a lot of people don't understand, as one of the challenges is the remoteness of many of the villages the Guard members will be returning to. We are taking that into account with the kind of reintegration programs we are initiating," Adams said.

"We have initiated a program we are calling the 'Warrior Support Circle,' a program that will allow Soldiers from that area to choose five people as their circle of concern who they will allow to come up to them and say, 'Hey, I see you are having a hard time. Let's see how we can help you,'" explained Adams. "We hope that by encouraging openness and a judgment-free environment, Soldiers will be more likely to ask for and accept help if they need it." ■

Green Line Training

By Alaska Military Youth Academy Staff

CAMP CARROLL, Alaska ...

The mission of the Alaska Military Youth Academy ChalleNGe program is to help intervene in and reclaim the lives of Alaska's at-risk youth and produce graduates with the values, skills, education and self-discipline necessary to succeed as adults. While in attendance at the academy, students receive instruction in a variety of classes in a quasi-military environment. These range from barracks life to drill and ceremonies to academics in this fully accredited school.

Fun Challenge. Soaring through the air, Cadet Julia Amaktoolik, of Anchorage, revels in the descent of the zip line at the Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson jump tower. The cadets accepted the challenge to leap from the three-story tower and slide 100 yards to the landing zone.

But it's not all drill, cleaning, road marches, inspections and academics. Cadets are introduced to a variety of military and survival style events called Green Line training. The purpose of Green Line training is to improve morale and confidence through camaraderie and healthy competition; it exposes cadets to military skills and wilderness recreation or survival events. While the specific lessons vary between seasons and with availability of ranges and instructors, some consistent examples include water survival, rappel tower and jump tower, shelter building, land navigation and orienteering, wilderness survival techniques and obstacle bridging. Green Line training is held most weekends during the post-acclimation period of the 22-week residential phase.

While the Green Line schedule is developed by the AMYA cadre section, close coordination with outside agencies and detailed planning is essential for these operations. The cadre section schedules training and backup in the event of weather or other event disruption. Like the military, formal risk assessments are developed to identify foreseeable risks and to ensure safe operations in, around and during the exercise. Cadre personnel often provide instruction, but on many occasions, highly trained National Guard or U.S. Army instructors provide the professional training

Rope Bridge Confidence. Cadet Santos Bustamante, of Anchorage, smiles as he works hand over hand to cross a 30-foot rope bridge to test his Swiss seat harness tying. The rope bridge training was a precursor to rappel wall training where the cadets must rely on their Swiss seat harness tying skills to descend a three-story wall. Photo: Roman Schara, AMYA required and contribute immensely to the academy mission.

The experience of the academy since its inception in 1994 is that these Green Line training events provide significant practical exposure to important skills. A side benefit is that the cadets greatly enjoy these excursions. A significant portion of students opt for the military after graduation, and these training events give them a leg up when they enter military training. All of the cadets are Alaska residents, and Green Line training provides each of them improved capabilities in wilderness adaptation, a real plus in Alaska. ■

Winter Survival. The ability to build a snow cave in the extreme conditions of an Alaska winter is a lifesaving exercise. Cadets of class 2012-02, 2nd Platoon, constructed their shelter large enough for six people and had a great time doing it. Photo: Roman Schara, AMYA

Drown-Proof Training. Cadets of 2nd Platoon, class 2012-02 watch as a fellow cadet takes a leap of faith from the high dive platform. In this exercise, cadets are blindfolded as they go off the platform to simulate having to evacuate a ship at night. The drown-proof training also entails learning to use the uniform as a life preserver, and cadets are trained in open water floating techniques. Photo: Roman Schara, AMYA

The mission of the National Guard Alaska Military Youth Academy Challenge Program is to intervene in and reclaim the lives of at-risk youth. We produce program Graduates with the values, skills, education and self-discipline necessary to succeed as adults. Over 80% of the Program's graduates go on to become successful citizens by joining the work force, the military or by continuing their education.

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... If you're an enlisted Soldier in the Alaska Army National Guard and are interested in becoming an officer, the Army has a program for you called the Simultaneous Membership Program.

The SMP allows you to attend Army Reserve Officer Training Corps at either the University of Alaska Anchorage or Fairbanks while earning pay and benefits as a drilling Soldier in the Alaska Army National Guard.

"SMP is a program for Guardsmen and Reservists to be in ROTC and be drilling Guardsmen or Reservists at the same time," said Lieutenant Danny Canlas, UAA ROTC recruiter, Alaska Army National Guard. "There are a lot of great benefits for being SMP between the Guard and ROTC."

Soldiers receive E-5 pay for their drill activities and an additional stipend of $350-$500 depending on their college year.

"SMP Soldiers are also eligible to receive tuition assistance coupled with their increase in drill pay and ROTC stipend," Canlas said. "This allows Soldiers to focus on school and not finances."

In addition to the monthly commitment to the National Guard, a cadet undertakes a commitment as a cadet, which hones their basic Soldier skills and expands their understanding of the Army.

"It sounded great, and I figured if nothing else this is a commitment that I can meet, and it will pay for my schooling," said Private First Class Rebekah Williams, ROTC SMP cadet, Alaska Army National Guard. "It's worth it to me because this is one more area in my life that I can be a part of that Army dynamic."

While all cadets have their own motivations for joining, most cadets do enjoy the training that comes from ROTC.

Army ROTC is divided into two primary types of training: a three-credit course that each cadet takes that coincides with a student's academic year and a one-credit leadership laboratory course.

"Each year, the range of topics expands in both tactical and leadership depth, with senior cadets learning the military decision making process, the operations process, evaluation reports and more. There is a history of the United States Army course that all cadets must complete. All cadets graduate with a minor in national defense and strategic studies," Canlas said. "Lead lab is designed to execute training, which ranges anywhere from basic soldiering skills, such as first aid and land navigation, to tactical training in the field."

Soldiers in SMP are also contractually obligated to the ROTC program, but do receive a commission as a second lieutenant upon completion of the program requirements and graduation.

"The process of being able to pull through and accomplish, to get one more step toward my goal has been so rewarding," Williams said. "I love ROTC, the Guard, and being in the Army more than I ever thought I would." ■

Let's celebrate our teachers.

What's one secret to improved student performance in math and science? Great teachers. Research shows that great teachers make the biggest difference in student performance. And long-term benefits — including college attendance and lifelong earnings — can be affected by the quality of a student's teacher in a single year. That's why ExxonMobil has invested nearly $140 million over the past decade in teacher development programs. Let's invest in our teachers so they can inspire our students. Let's solve this.™
